There is no way that's true. People like wolves. Unnecessarily, too. One of my pet peeves is people who think that wolves are kind. News flash: They're not. They have no sense of kindness or compassion. It doesn't make them evil or mean, it makes them normal wolves. I like wolves, ok? But where do you guys get that completely bogus statistic?

The statistic has actually been around for a few years, it's only just gotten popular again. You managed to bring it back.

Also, what book did you find it in?

It depends on the definition of "evil", which isn't very specific. From what I've seen, asking around using a sample estimate, that statistic doesn't seem to be very reliant with my definition of "evil". @Twilight What definition does it go with? And what book was it?

Oh my gosh, I'm so sorry. I never meant to make this thread aggressive. I wasn't in a great mood when I posted this, but I still had no intention of starting a flame war. Everyone who was offended or was made slightly less in a positive mood by this thread, I'm so, so sorry about this. It's my fault for not having enough foresight. I'm really sorry and please we don't need to continue this conversation.

~~@hiraeth I like the P!ATD quote in your sig though.~~

@Kurimuzon-en

They're neither, in my opinion.

We know a lot about wolves. We know their behaviours and the reasons behind them. We've studied their brains.

Wolves are far from misunderstood.

Part of what we know about wolves is that they're ruthless killers and pretty deadly. However, this doesn't make them evil, just good at surviving in the wild.

So yeah, neither.

Hyenas are really neat animals. They're actually more closely related to cats than dogs.

Have any of you guys seen African painted dogs? They're beautiful
